Longwood plans computer class

An exciting opportunity for persons involved in financial management will be offered this summer by Longwood College's department of business and economics.

The course (Business 340) will explore how a personal computer equipped with a VISICALC financial management package can help in business forecasting, financial planning, and budgeting. It is scheduled for July 5 to August 5, with classes meeting Monday through Friday, 11:05 to 12:35, in Ruffner 306.

VISICALC is a new decision-making tool which analyzes a business's financial plan, making it possible to "fine tune" results and save time. It can also perform impact analyses on all parts of the business plan, such as the effect of changes in sales or profits. This "what if" ability makes VISICALC an outstanding management tool for both large and small businesses.

The instructor for the course is Dr. Kuldeep S. Turna, assistant professor of economics. The course carries three semester hours of academic credit.

For additional information, contact the Office of Continuing Studies at Longwood, telephone 804/-392-9256.
